CONTENT

PART I

CHAPTER 1
GETTING READY FOR THE ROAD – PERSPECTIVES, GOALS, GUIDES........................................ 1
1.1 Roadside – More than a side phenomenon................................................. 1
1.2 Conceptualising the road: Three alternative perspectives .................. 4
   1.2.1 The road as an infrastructure for mobility: stabilising, making structures coherent ........................................ 5
   1.2.2 The road as a system of mobility: combining elements and facilitating flow ........................................ 6
   1.2.3 The road as media enacting mobility: circulating sensations, activating fluidities ........................................ 8
   1.2.4 Characteristics of roads/roadways according to the three perspectives .... 10
1.3 The Legislator’s View ................................................................. 12
   1.3.1 Engineering interaction ........................................................................ 14
   1.3.2 Re-routing control: when anomalies of interaction challenge the hegemony... 15
   1.3.3 Folk sociologists as rival legislators: the possibility of the impossibility of eliminating uncertainty ......................... 16
1.4 Towards a Sociology of the Road: Mediators on the move .................. 17
   1.4.1 Ethnomethodology .................................................................................. 19
   1.4.2 CSCW ........................................................................................................ 20
   1.4.3 Actor-Network Theory (ANT) ................................................................. 21
   1.4.4 Cultural Studies of Road Mobilities (CRM) ............................................ 22

CHAPTER 2
AN EVERYDAY ENCOUNTER WITH ROAD REPRESENTATIONS............................................... 25
2.1 Three Images – One Road Segment: An Introduction to Representations ........................................ 25
2.2 The Road as a Media ‘Lookalike’: A Plethora of Representational Objects ............................. 28
2.3 Making Representations Comprehensible: Some Tentative Conclusions. 32

CHAPTER 3
TWO PILLARS OF A SOCIOLOGY
ENACTING THE ROAD................................................................................. 35
3.1 The Insufficiency of Representations.................................................... 36
   3.1.1 The Problem of inconclusability ............................................................ 36
   3.1.2 The Problem of indexicality ................................................................. 37
   3.1.3 The Problem of reflexivity .................................................................... 37
3.2 In Pursuit of a Sociology Beyond the Horrors of Representation (I):
   Situated Interpretative Practice (EM)............................................................ 39
   3.2.1 Accomplishing Accountability ............................................................... 39
   3.2.2 Witnessed accounts: scenes, ‘just thisness’, and ‘documents of’ .............. 40
   3.2.3 Ethnomethodology vs Formal Analysis: Durkheim’s aphorism re-visited ...... 42
   3.2.4 EM at the Petrol station: reading locations and ‘doing heterogeneity’ .... 44
3.3 In Pursuit of a Sociology Beyond the Horrors of Representation (II):
   The Sociology of Associations (ANT)............................................................ 46
   3.3.1 Rethinking agency ................................................................................. 46
   3.3.2 Rejuvenating sociology through a ‘semiotic turn’ .................................. 48
   3.3.3 Delegation/Prescription ........................................................................ 49
   3.3.4 Representations in the making: Picturing invisible Paris ...................... 51
   3.3.5 White-boxed monitoring – the new delegates along the road side ......... 53
3.4 Two intersected crusades: Outlining the common ground for two unorthodox scientific communities............................................................... 55
   3.4.1 Overcoming the horrors of representation: five joint assumptions ......... 55
   3.4.2 Odd couple but plausible bed-fellows .................................................... 57
CHAPTER 7
SHARING SPACE: CO-PRESENCE
AND MOBILE-ICT-USE AT PETROL STATIONS ..................................125

7.1 INTRODUCTION .........................................................................................125
7.2 ETHNOGRAPHY IN CSCW DESIGN: THE ROLE OF ETHNOMETHODOLOGY ..........126
  7.2.1 Mutual interest in studying day-by-day occupational work .........................126
  7.2.2 Interactional order vs. Institutional order: misinterpretations and misunderstandings between EM and CSCW ...........................................127
7.3 SHARING PLACE AS A TOPIC FOR COLLABORATION ..............................129
  7.3.1 Co-presence and Design ........................................................................130
7.4 THE PETROL STATION A HOT SPOT ............................................................131
7.5 MOBILE TECHNOLOGY USE ON PETROL STATIONS .................................132
7.6 HANDLING CO-PRESENCE AT PETROL STATIONS ......................................133
  7.6.1 Limiting different activities to specific locations .........................................134
  7.6.2 Intended duration of stay ........................................................................134
  7.6.3 Being at two places at the same time .........................................................135
7.7 DIRECTIONS FOR DESIGNING WITH CO-PRESENCE IN MIND ..................138
7.8 NON-OBSTRACTIVE MOBILE-ICT-USE ......................................................139
7.9 CONCLUSION ............................................................................................140
REFERENCES ....................................................................................................142

CHAPTER 8
PUBLIC ROAD SIGNS AS INTERMEDIATE INTERACTION ...............................149

8.1 INTRODUCTION ..........................................................................................149
8.2 MOBILE COMMUNITIES ..............................................................................151
  8.2.1 Related road-sign studies ........................................................................152
8.3 METHOD AND SETTING ............................................................................154
8.4 COMMUNITIES AND THE PUBLIC ROAD SIGNS ..........................................155
  8.4.1 Interaction within communities ................................................................156
  8.4.2 Interaction with non community members ................................................157
8.5 POSTING SIGNS AS PRACTICAL ACHIEVEMENT .......................................158
  8.5.1 Boldness .................................................................................................158
  8.5.2 Location as index .....................................................................................158
  8.5.3 Repetition ...............................................................................................159
  8.5.4 Personalisation .........................................................................................159
  8.5.5 Dynamic messaging ................................................................................159
8.6 ADAPTING TO ROAD AUTHORITIES .......................................................161
  8.6.1 Testing limits of inspectors’ interpretations .................................................162
8.7 DISCUSSION ................................................................................................162
REFERENCES ....................................................................................................164
PART I